Choose one practice Facet where you are currently at the Enacting level

EXECUTE

Where am I already practicing this facet in liberating ways?

Recall specific moments where you demonstrated this practice at the Enacting level.

Consider:

What did I do?
Who was impacted?
What strengths or values were present?
What made this possible?

What could grow here—and how might it balance my stronger areas?

What patterns, assumptions, habits, relationships, or conditions keep this practice from becoming more consistent or moving toward Empowering?

Consider:

What patterns do I notice?
What barriers to surface?
What assumptions might I need to question?
What support or resources would help?

What small, equity-centered goal can I set?

Identify one or two focused practices that would stretch this facet from Enacting toward Empowering.

Consider:

What is one manageable action?
How does it advance equity,?
What will help me succeed?
How will I know this goal is realistic?

What liberating move can I enact now?

Commit to one concrete leadership action you will intentionally practice this week.

Consider:

What exactly will I do?
When will I do it?
Who (if anyone) will I involve or inform?
How will I hold myself accountable?

Evidence of Growth

How will I know I practiced this intentionally?

Leadership Commitment

Praxis Note

Through the R.I.S.E. Cycle, each intentional leadership move—however small—creates conditions for greater awareness, accountability, equity, and collective flourishing. Transformation rarely emerges from a single dramatic act. Instead, it develops through the steady accumulation of reflective, justice-centered choices that reshape habits, relationships, and systems over time.
